

Top Three-Tier Hospitals in China

In November 2024, the "2023 China Hospital Comprehensive Ranking" by Fudan University was released. This ranking is an authoritative annual list that evaluates and ranks major hospitals in China based on their comprehensive strength and reputation.

The evaluation criteria include:

Reputation Weight: Specialty reputation, overall hospital reputation, research achievements, research investment, clinical service capability, and regional influence.

Research Weight: Scientific research achievements and investment in scientific research.

Clinical Service Capability: Medical technology, medical quality, and medical efficiency.

Regional Influence: Regional medical centers and balanced regional development.

The ranking uses a comprehensive evaluation system that considers all the above aspects to obtain a comprehensive score for each hospital. The system highlights the specialty advantages and regional influence of each hospital.

The ranking of the top 100 hospitals is not a direct sequential ranking, rather a grading system consisting of five levels: A++++, A+++ , A++ , A+ , and A. Each level includes 20 hospitals, with A++++ being the highest grade. Hospitals are arranged in the order of administrative region codes (North China, Northeast, East China, Central China, South China, Southwest, Northwest); within the same grade, the order is not ranked, and hospitals with fewer strokes in the first letter of their names are listed first. Due to the value of references, hospitals with grade A++++, A+++ and A++ are included in this document.
